Working For God

The Bible calls us to share with people in need: in the Law of Moses, in the Prophets, in Jesus' teaching, and in the letters of Paul. The command to work hard, "doing something useful with our own hands," earning enough that something might be left over, goes hand in hand with being compassionate.

What's more, Paul presents working and sharing as a way to climb out of a dishonest way of life.

There's something clean and good about doing something useful—and then giving the surplus away. It reverses the old way of life in which a person would steal from unsuspecting, innocent passers-by, often by lurking in dark places and waiting to prey on them. Paul calls us back from the abyss of a corrupt life to the truth that our first ancestors had God-given work to do. How good to plant seeds, water them, and see them send up shoots; how good to tend and prune and sweep, taking care of the garden of creation we were given.

Paul shows us a way of life that is characterized by growth in Christ, in a loving community of believers who do something good and useful. How wonderful is the fellowship of loving, kind, compassionate people redeemed by Christ. It's what I find here at St. Paul's.

MISSION MOMENT (PASTOR KIM)

Feed the Children

Children need access to nourishing food to grow and thrive. Yet millions of children in the U.S. lack consistent access to enough food for a healthy, active lifestyle. There are multiple contributing factors to child hunger in the U.S., including household finances, family demographics and even geography.

Feed the Children's US programs meet immediate needs and facilitate sustainable solutions as we work to ensure that no child goes to bed hungry. In 2024, Feed the Children provided 80.6 million pounds of food and household items, 10.6 million people and families helped, with a value of $349.7 million of distributed resources. Through the Feed Initiative, they work to create a measurable and sustainable impact on child hunger in a targeted community. Feed the Children is our mission for March.
